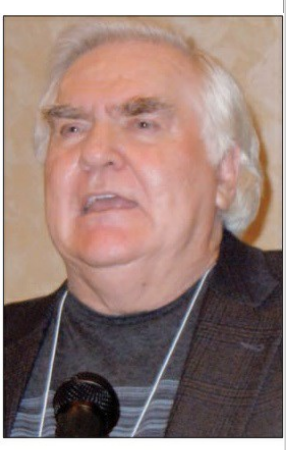
BISHOP WILLIAMSON

Embattled Bishop Speaks Out

• Bishop Richard Williamson urges Christians around world to stand shoulder to shoulder against NWO



A star-studded array of gutsy speakers and activists appeared behind the podium during the AFP Free Speech Conference in Austin. These included (from left to right), longtime nationalist publisher Willis A. Carto, radio host and pastor Mark Dankof, musician and free speech activist Paul Topete, Canadian free speech activist Paul Fromm and Texas-based publisher, author and evangelist Texe Marrs of the Power of Prophecy Ministries.

One of the most provocative presentations at AFP's free speech conference came from traditionalist Catholic Bishop Richard Williamson.

A widely traveled English-born educator, fluent in English, French, German and Spanish, Williamson has long been internationally known as a leader of the traditionalist Catholic movement, which rejects the liberal, modernist forces that redirected Roman Catholic teachings in the wake of the 1958 Second Vatican Council that is known to have been under the influence of Jewish and Freemasonic elements.

In his address to the free speech conference, Williamson discussed "the march to the abyss" outlining "the disintegration of Christendom."

Beginning with the controversial activities of English King Henry VIII, followed by revolutionary forces that further brought the West (including the people of the United States) away from historic religious traditions, Williamson expressed his view that American political eruptions — including the Civil War under Abraham Lincoln and the socialism of Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal — have contributed to the morass of the West.

All of this taken together, said Williamson, pushes the advance of what is known as "the New World Order," which, the bishop said, is laying the foundation for the rise of globalism under the anti- Christ.

Williamson believes the only way patriots in the United States — and around the world — can come together is to adopt a unity of thinking (based on historic Christian teachings) that will stand to counter the very real (and consistent) ideological foundation of the enemies who now seek to impose their agenda upon us all. Ideological unity, he said, is the key to Christian restoration.

And while Williamson's views are based on his own traditionalist Roman Catholic faith, his message resonated even with non-Catholic attendees at the free speech conference.

Having served his order, the Society of St. Pius X (SSPX), for many years around the United States and in Argentina, Williamson and other SSPX leaders were subjected to smears in the global press — orchestrated by the Anti-Defamation League and the organized Jewish community — after Pope Benedict XVI sought to heal the rift with the SSPX.

Williamson was targeted, in particular, because he had asserted his belief (among other things) that Israel had participated in the assassination of President Kennedy, that the U.S. government version of what happened on 9-11 was a lie and, most especially, because he expressed doubts as to whether 6 million Jews had actually been deliberately exterminated during World War II.

For stating his views about wartime history, the German government filed criminal charges against Williamson for — of all things — inciting racial hatred. Note, though, that the charges were levied because of remarks Williamson made in Sweden in an interview with a Swedish television crew whose report happened to be broadcast in Germany, where making such comments is illegal.

Although the conviction was dismissed on technical grounds, the German thought police returned to find him guilty again. He has been fined, but the bishop, as a matter of principle, refuses to pay the fine.

Ultimately, the SSPX was under such pressure that even its leaders buckled and expelled Williamson from the order.

Today, the undaunted and highly respected bishop has established the St. Marcel Initiative to further what he calls "the purposes of the Catholic resistance."
